>Chapter 1

>A/N: Hahaha. A bloody story. Had this thought in my head for a long time so now I shall write it. This is about Laura and her day with the Ham-hams. Bloody and gruesome is the end of the story so don't be so surprise. This story is about a girl named Eskimo.

>Today was a great day. Everything went great at school except when the teacher was giving us masses of homework. I got home early so I decided to play with Hamtaro, but he wasn't there. I search high and low for him. I wondered where Hamtaro was. Hope he wasn't in danger or anything horrible. I ran down stairs to the kitchen.

>"Mom, I can't find Hamtaro. I searched everywhere for him and I still can't find him."

>"Are you sure? Hamtaro would have never escape."

>"Yes, I'm sure. I searched high and low for him. Can we put up posters about Hamtaro missing?"

>"Okay, then. Why don't you start working on some drafts of the poster, or do your homework. Just do something to get it off your mind. Don't worry, we'll find him."

>I ran up the stairs and tried to do my homework, but I couldn't. Since Hamtaro was missing I couldn't concentrate. So I decided to go to the woods and walk around.

>"Oh, how I miss him so very much. I don't know how I can continue without seeing Hamtaro's cute face." I had thought in my head.

>The trees, flowers, and the birds' songs were so calming after awhile. Even though that had taken my mind off of Hamtaro, I still yet couldn't forget about him. So depress because Hamtaro is gone.

[CRACK] Oops. I just stepped on this. it looks like a mini version of a roller coaster. Huh what is this? It looks like a theme park. I continued to walk until I was surrounded by hamsters. There was Hamtaro. I had finally found him. Now I could return home with a big grin across my face. But there was something about Hamtaro that gave me the creeps. His eyes were glaring evilly towards me and I couldn't dare to look straight into them. I took a step back because I got afraid. Just then I stepped on a branch, and tripped and landed on my back.

>All the hamsters came closer and closer. Teeth showing, creepy walk. Glaring red eyes, step, step, step. Closer and closer, couldn't stop them from coming. Just then, before you could say Laura, the Ham-hams had all taken a big leap and started to slash at me. Covered in my own blood, clothes torn, and in the state of fear. Slowly and bloody, I had died from the attack. No one could hear my cries for help. The Ham-hams had been gnawing on my body. I was just lying there motionless with the grass stained in dark red. No one had discovered my body until the next day.
